Reading Comprehension

This part consists of two passages, each followed by several related questions. For each question, choose the most appropriate answer based on the text.

שאלה

Text I (Questions 13-17)

- (1) Balloons hold an allure for people of all ages. Invented by English scientist Michael Faraday in 1824, balloons were being mass produced by the beginning of the twentieth century and soon became a much sought-after item. Indeed, millions of dollars are spent annually on balloons, a favorite at all kinds of social and promotional events.

- (5) Balloons come in different shapes, sizes, and colors and create a festive, playful atmosphere. Lightweight and delicate, they hover, float and bob in ways that make them appear almost alive. They have an extraordinary power to evoke joy and enchantment and are all but guaranteed to make people smile. In the words of the famous storybook character Winnie the Pooh, "Nobody can be uncheered with a balloon."

- (10) And yet not everyone would agree that balloons are invariably a source of delight or good cheer. These fragile objects may cause disappointment and sadness if they suddenly burst or are carried away by the wind. For this reason, they are often seen to represent loss – not just the physical loss of the balloon, but also more abstract losses like the loss of beauty or innocence. Balloons remind us of the transient nature of things, including life itself – because they can be here one moment and gone the next. The fact that balloons have to be held by a string to prevent them escaping our grasp and floating away can also be associated with the idea of freedom constrained.

Text II (Questions 18-22)

- (1) Elizabeth Cady Stanton first met Lucretia Mott in London in 1840, a chance encounter that would herald a new era in women's history. Stanton, an anti-slavery activist, and Mott, a Quaker and veteran advocate of social reform, had traveled as part of the American delegation to the World Anti-Slavery Convention being held in the city.
- (5) After being denied seating on the grounds of their sex, Stanton and Mott became convinced of the need to formally convene and address the condition of women. Eight years would pass before the event that they envisioned would come about.

- (10) In July 1848, Mott was visiting her sister in Waterloo, New York, and Stanton was living in nearby Seneca Falls when they met again at a social gathering. As discussion turned to women's rights, Stanton argued that the time had come for women's issues to be laid before the public and that women themselves must shoulder the responsibility. Before the afternoon was out, the women had decided to call a convention "to discuss the social, civil, and religious condition and rights of women".

- (15) Stanton was assigned the task of composing a Declaration of Sentiments for the convention. Drawing upon the American Declaration of Independence, she submitted that "all men and women are created equal" and went on to list the "injuries and usurpations" suffered by women at the hands of men. Among the resolutions Stanton drafted for the improvement of women's lot was one positing the radical assertion that it was a woman's duty to obtain the right to vote. This resolution shocked even Lucretia Mott, who exclaimed, "Why, Lizzie, you will make us ridiculous."
- (20)

- (25) The Seneca Falls Convention took place that same summer at the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Seneca Falls. It was publicized only by a small notice placed in the Seneca County Courier, and the organizers anticipated a modest affair. "The convention will not be so large as it otherwise might be, owing to the busy time with the farmers," Mott told Stanton, "but it will be a beginning." Nonetheless, a crowd of three hundred people, including forty men, came from miles away. How ironic that at this juncture in the history of the women's movement, no woman was willing to preside over the proceedings – the task fell to Lucretia Mott's husband.
